

Syllabus for HIS 202H

Graduate seminar in c20 US history, Fall 2023

Eric Rauchway

July 24, 2023

Introduction

This course provides an introduction to some basic themes and literature of twentieth-century US history. While it will be impossible to cover all the topics necessary for a comprehensive examination, this seminar should serve as an introduction and a way in to the material. Course aims include the standard graduate seminar goals of developing participants' ability to analyze and criticize arguments, including especially an understanding of sources and methods; also the more practical goal of learning how to present such analysis and critique to best effect. You should finish the seminar with a reasonably good foundation for further reading for your comprehensive examinations, and also for constructing a survey course in twentieth-century US history.

This seminar meets weekly on Monday afternoon, 3:10–6:00 p.m., in Social Sciences room 4217.

Please note the date of the version of the syllabus you are reading; if it is before the start of the term it is quite likely there is a more recent version available.

Course calendar

You should ensure you have access to the required reading (please see the list below) and that you have read it thoroughly prior to the class meeting for which it is assigned in this calendar. You should come to class prepared to discuss the authors' arguments, sources, and methods of analysis and presentation, and in seminar you should pose questions and propose answers and otherwise participate actively. You should complete work as assigned.

If you do not already have a short shelf of texts on how to write, and specifically how to write history, you might begin to accumulate one before this course starts. Style guides include the old classics, like Strunk & White, The Elements of Style, as well as Dreyer's English, a recently published instant classic, as it were. On the conduct of history you might begin with Bloch, The Historian's Craft.

Date	Assignment
October 2	Immigration, ethnicity, and the state in the 1920s . Read McGirr; Kraut, chapter 4; Sweet. Write a review of McGirr appropriate for an academic journal of history. Consult the review section of recent issues of the Journal of American History or the American Historical Review to get a sense of what a such a review might sound like. These journals are often quite strict about word limits so for this assignment please assume that your review can run a maximum of 500 words. Please format the description of the book and your byline as appropriate for the journal.
October 9	The New Deal: politics & policy . Read Rauchway; Morgan; Leuchtenburg; Davies on 1940; Hannsgen & Papadimitriou; Hausman, Rhode, & Wieland; Williams.

Date	Assignment
October 16	Black Voters & the New Deal Coalition . Read Grant; Thurston. Write a review essay considering these books together. Look at the essays in Reviews in American History or the Times Literary Supplement for an indication of how this kind of writing sounds. Reviewers often begin by setting out an appropriate theme that unites the books under review in a way accessible to non-readers, then discuss how each of a few books address that theme. In an essay of 2,000 words, please do the same for these two books. Format the essay as would be appropriate for Reviews in American History . Please note, that means you should give a title for the essay, and then the information for each of the books, and then in the body of the essay, citations for the books under review should get parenthetical notation while citations from any outside source (which should be minimal) should get an endnote in the appropriate style.
October 23	Mobilization for war . Read Wilson; Guglielmo; Katznelson, Geiger, & Kryder.
October 30	End of war . Read Gallicchio; Asada; Bernstein; Hasegawa & Asada.
November 6	McCarthyism . Read D. Johnson; Schrecker; Olmsted.
November 13	Civil rights . Read K. Johnson; Cha-Jua & Lang; Schickler.
November 20	The 1960s and 1970s . Read MacKenzie & Weisbrot; also forum on the 1970s: Tuck, introduction; Davies on conservatism; Tuck on Black protest; Hall; Zeitz; Jacobs & Zelizer; Schulman.
November 27	Conservatism & beyond . Read Belew; Zelizer; Perlstein. Write a review of the Belew book in the style of a newspaper book review. Consult the New York Times Book Review or Washington Post Book World for a sense of what such a review might look and sound like. Consider that you are writing as a scholar with expertise in the field, while addressing a general, educated audience with an interested in the subject. Take into account that your editor will almost certainly want you to address the relationship of the book to current events. Your review should run about 1,500 words.
December 4	Americans & others . Read Lee; Serwer.

You might note that I have assigned a couple of articles by scholars from this department. As a general rule you should familiarize yourself more broadly with the scholarship of professors in the department where you are studying for your PhD, if for no other reason than that it will serve you well in preparing for your comprehensive examinations to know your examiners' opinion of the field.

Links appear in this list for readings that can be found only online. All readings have been registered with the campus bookstore and with library reserves as of the end of July. Beyond that, it is up to you—and this is part of the practical training of the course—to acquire the readings in a timely fashion. You will find you can get all of them using resources available as of this writing.
